The San Diego State University School of Social Work in collaboration with the Faculty of Social Administration at Thammasat University in Bangkok Thailand is pleased to announce a study abroad program this summer in Thailand. The program will give participants the exciting opportunity to see health and social services issues in an international context.

The study tour will commence with four days of study in Bangkok, the capital and cultural center of Thailand. Participants also stay and study for 8 days at the Thammasat University Learning Center in the seaside resort of Pattaya, and spend 1 day/night in a Thai village in the adjacent Rayong province.

Specific Course Content: Faculty from Thammasat University, one of the most prestigious Universities in Thailand, will deliver workshops on Thai culture, social problems, health and human services issues. Content will be presented on the major global issues that are changing the face of health and human services around the world, such as human trafficking, international child welfare issues, HIV/AIDS, poverty, substance abuse, mental health, refugees, migrants, global gender issues, community
The core of the study will occur in field visitations to a variety of health and social service agencies, tours of cultural and historic sites, and the opportunity to stay overnight with a Thai family in a rural village. Participants will be able to interact with Thai health and human service professionals and learn about their work.

In addition to the above course content, here are some examples of the cultural, social, and recreational opportunities:

- Bangkok: Wat Phra Keow (The center of Thai Buddhism) Grand Palace, Wats Po (Temple of the Reclining Buddha) and Arun (Temple of Dawn), the ancient city of Ayuddaya, the Summer and Teak Palaces.
- Pattaya: Nong Prue Elephant Park, National Parks, and miles of beaches to explore.
